Transparency, strict adherence to law needed in projects: President

REGIONAL and State governments need to decide which projects should be prioritized and it should also consider how much it will benefit the people. Then the expense of the projects should be in the bill of the state budget, said U Htin Kyaw, President of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar and the Chairman of the Finance Commission.

Since the project works of the ministries and Region and State Governments will change in the coming 2018-19 financial year, discussion of the projects should be made frankly and to revise the budget in line with the targets of the projects, the President said. The Ministry of Planning and Finance has drawn up the budget and the Medium Term Fiscal Framework. It is now estimating expenses for departments and institutions and the Union Government is designating additions to Regional and State budgets.

“The 2017-18 budget was endorsed by the Financial Commission and the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw has scrutinized and approved after reducing some amount from the allotted budget. Then the President gave guidance to the Union, Region and State governments to collect what the government should get to the full amount according to the plan in the respective financial year. Moreover, it needed to be transparent, accountable and to strictly follow the rules and regulations in inviting the tender for construction and procuring the materials” the President added.

The President also said that ministries should coordinate with other ministries to make sure there was no overlapping of projects.

Government mulls change to Financial Year

“The four-month rainy season comes after the Financial Year which starts on 1st April and it causes hindrances to the development of the country,” said the President. He also stressed the need to seek ways for overcoming challenges that can arise when the Financial Year is changed to the period starting from October and ending in September.

Need to Distinguish Between Politics and Discipline

You are required to distinguish politics from discipline. Nothing will work without discipline. If someone wants to violate a discipline, he must be well convinced of what kind of punishment he deservedly will receive as a consequence. Try your best to have an order changed by keeping discipline. Abide by disciplines before having it changed. This is the difference between politics and discipline.

Ethnic unity, environmental conservation prioritised

The unity of ethnic nationals, human resources development and conservation of the environment need to be included as priorities in the country’s future, it was decided yesterday at the National Planning Commission meeting yesterday.

President U Htin Kyaw, the commission chairman, noted at the meeting at the Presidential Palace that the first National Planning Commission meeting held in January had decided upon a long term requirement for national development, a budget that conforms with the adopted national economic policy and a National Planning Law. But there was still the need to discuss and identify priority processes for annual programmes, priority works and implementation methods.

“In drawing up a national plan, the unity of ethnic nationals, rule of law, stability, human resources development and conservation of the natural environment need to be included”, said U Htin Kyaw.

Furthermore, projects and works included in the national plan need to be studied and assessed for feasibility, economic viability, benefit to the people and benefit to regional development. Suggestions and comments made by hluttaw representatives in the second Pyidaungsu Hluttaw fourth regular session meeting need to be reviewed and assessed to draw up the FY 2018-2019 National Plan, President U Htin Kyaw said.

The meeting was attended by National Planning Commission Vice Chairmen State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, Vice Presidents U Myint Swe and U Henry Van Thio, National Planning Commission members Union Ministers, Union Attorney General, Union Auditor General, Union Civil Service Board Chairman, Nay Pyi Taw Council Chairman, states and regions Chief Ministers, Central Bank of Myanmar governor, self-administered division and region chairmen and officials.

In yesterday’s National Planning Commission meeting, the pros and cons of implementing the FY 2017-2018 National Plan were discussed. Myanmar’s economic growth estimated by international organisations were 6.5 per cent by the World Bank, 6.4 per cent by Asian Development Bank, 6.3 per cent by the International Monetary Fund and 6 per cent by ASEAN+3 Macroeconomic Research Office.

Myanmar’s economic growth estimated by international organisations were 6.5 per cent by the World Bank, 6.4 per cent by Asian Development Bank, 6.3 per cent by the International Monetary Fund and 6 per cent by ASEAN+3 Macroeconomic Research Office. Also, it was decided that there was a need to formulate and coordinate work programmes for effective and timely implementation of FY 2017-2018 National Plan approved and enacted by Pyidaungsu Hluttaw in the union, states and regions. Lastly, it was decided that there was a need to connect the benefits for the union and people with set national economic policy in drawing up the FY 2018-2019 National Plan.

The National Planning Commission secretary Union Minister for Planning and Finance U Kyaw Win explained the process and status of drawing up, implementing and managing national plans.

Afterwards, Union Ministers U Win Khaing, U Thant Sin Maung, Dr Than Myint, Yangon Region Chief Minister U Phyo Min Thein and Mandalay Region Chief Minister Dr Zaw Myint Maung discussed electrical, special economic zone, export and import and transport sectors.

“It is important for the Union government and states and regional governments to work in coordination. The National Plan is to be approached with thoughts on the duties and responsibilities of states and regions in a federal democratic union system.

Bumper crop for durian growers

DURIAN growers in Kyainseikgyi, a township in the Kayawey District of Kayin State, say that it has been a good year for them as they reaped a bumper harvest of durian fruits this season, receiving a good price for durian, one of most popular seasonal fruits in the country.

Thanks to good truck transportation services, durian produced in Tualaygon, Thamainlit, Htihau and Kyeikdon villages in Kyunsu Township have been sent to Malamyaing and Mudon markets as well as to nearby towns quickly and easily.

The durian fruits are widely cultivated in Kyainseikgyi on a commercial scale. All farm activities in a durian orchard are directed toward achieving a profitable crop. Based on the size and freshness of the fruit, one durian is worth between Ks1,000 and Ks5,000, a local grower said.

A durian tree starts bearing fruit when it reaches about 10 years of age. One tree has the capacity to produce more than 200 durian fruits, farmers said.

55th Anniversary of Seven July memorial held

By Ko Moe

The 55th anniversary of the Seven July memorial was held yesterday at the tomb of Bo Aung Kyaw, on the grounds of the former Rangoon University Student Union building.

Present at the ceremony were the President of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and the State Counsellor, Vice President U Myint Swe, Secretary-General of the Ministry of Home Affairs, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Minister of State for Regional Development, Commerce and Industry, Minister of State for Transport and Communications, Minister of State for Information Technology, Chief Minister of Insein and the Chief Minister of Sagaing Region.

At the ceremony, the ABFSU issued a declaration of objection of efforts to rebuild the new student union building at the site of the former student union, without official recognition of forming student unions freely and allowing them to perform activities, in an attempt to improve the image of former military dictators responsible for atrocities.

In 1962, students staged a protest against the military coup of General Ne Win, who then ordered a brutal suppression of the demonstration that resulted in numerous deaths and thousands of arrests. The next morning, the military junta blew up the Rangoon University Student Union building with dynamite. The day was designated as Seven July.
Abe preparing to reshuffle Cabinet in early August: sources

TOKYO — Prime Minister Shinzo Abe is preparing to reshuffle his Cabinet and Liberal Democratic Party leadership possibly in the first week of August, government and party sources said on Friday.

The decision comes in the wake of the LDP's crushing defeat in the Tokyo metropolitan assembly elections last weekend.

Abe was initially expected to conduct the reshuffle in September when terms of the LDP leadership posts come to an end, but his party's historic defeat appears to have forced his hand.

Although the local election was viewed as a referendum on Tokyo Governor Yuriko Koike's one-year-old party, it also served to gauge public sentiment about the performance of Abe's government.

The number of LDP seats in the 127-member assembly dropped to 22 from the previously held 57, as Koike's new party and allies made headway.

Abe, who is in Hamburg, Germany, to attend a two-day meeting of the Group of 20 major economies starting later Friday, is expected to make a final decision over the makeup of his new Cabinet, including the exact timing of the change, after returning home on Wednesday, according to the sources.

By refreshing his Cabinet lineup next month, the prime minister is apparently aiming to allow sufficient preparation time for the new ministers before the extraordinary Diet session that is expected to be convened in September.

Abe is likely to keep key members such as Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister Taro Aso and Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga in their posts as well as Secretary General Toshihiro Nikai and Vice President Masahiko Komura.

Some party members argue, however, that drastic reform of the lineups is needed to allay frustration within the party.

Abe, who began his second stint as prime minister in December 2012, saw his Cabinet’s approval rating plunge in the run-up to the Tokyo metro election.

A number of scandals hurt the government's standing, including one that alleged that Abe used his influence to help Kake Educational Institution, whose president is a close friend, open a veterinary school in a special economic zone.

The ruling bloc, including the LDP's junior coalition partner the Komeito party, also drew harsh criticism due to its handling of a controversial "conspiracy" law to penalize the planning of certain crimes. The Abe government rammed the bill through the Diet last month by bypassing a House of Councillors committee vote, much to the consternation of opposition parties.

In the envisioned reshuffle, Defence Minister Tomomi Inada is widely seen as likely to be replaced due in part to her remarks during a stump speech that implied the Self-Defence Forces' support for a certain candidate.

Justice Minister Katsutoshi Kaneda is also rumored to be on the outer amid criticism for his performance in handling the implementation of the conspiracy law.—Kyodo News

Mongolians vote in 1st presidential runoff amid economic crisis

ULAN BATOR — Mongolian voters headed to the polls on Friday in the country's first-ever runoff presidential election, choosing between a former martial arts star and a career politician of the governing party.

The election is seen as a referendum on the government's policy of implementing austerity measures, at a time when the country with a population of 3 million, landlocked between China and Russia, is struggling to pull its resource-dependent economy out of crisis.

Khaltmaa Battulga of the main opposition Democratic Party garnered the most votes in the first round of the presidential election last week, but there was no definitive winner as none of the candidates could secure the required majority.

Battulga, 54, also a business tycoon and resource nationalist who has criticized the government's spending cuts, faced off against Miyeegombe Enkhbold, chief of the ruling Mongolian People's Party, in the runoff.

Enkhbold narrowly came second in the three-horse race on 26 June, although his party won a sweeping victory in a parliamentary election a year ago.

Despite economic difficulties, the 52-year-old former prime minister has made national unity a campaign issue.

Enkhbold was tipped as the frontrunner before the election, but he struggled to connect with voters as allegations of corrupt land reforms during his time as mayor of Ulan Bator, the capital city, hung over the campaign's final weeks.

The runoff between the two candidates is to pick the successor to President Tsakhiagiin Elbegdorj of the Democratic Party, whose second and final four-year term in office ends this month.

Mongolia formerly enjoyed robust growth, with its gross domestic product growth peaking at 17.5 per cent in 2011. Following a sharp fall in global commodity prices, it is now saddled with heavy debt and its economy grew only 1 per cent last year.

The government has rolled out fiscal belt-tightening measures in exchange for securing earlier this year a $5.5 billion International Monetary Fund bailout package.

The polling stations are scheduled to close at 10 pm local time and the results of the runoff are expected to be known sometime Saturday.—Kyodo News

Discipline in its real meaning in Myanmar to be well-convincing for us

By Khin Maung Oo

Almost everywhere, discipline is a commonly used word in our everyday expressions. English dictionaries define it as “The practice of training people to obey rules and orders and punishing them if they do not (or) the controlled behavior or situation that results from this training.” According to it, we know that it is closely related to rules, orders and punishments. As known by all, rule and orders are enacted or promulgated for people to abide by. In case, we violate it a legal action will be taken against us and we are liable to get the punishment we deserve. Disciplines are prescribed for us respectively; school discipline for students, road and traffic discipline for pedestrians and vehicles, discipline for offices or companies, etc. To put it simply, we got accustomed to it since our younger days at school, because of having been trained by our teachers. Civics was taught since our salad days, and once in the past we were fond of keeping disciplines.

Yet, later before we recognized it, disciplines disappeared from our surroundings. In fact, discipline is prescribed by us ourselves. Disciplines for the public are drawn up by legislative bodies for our society to survive. Long whereas administrative bodies manage to make people obey them. So, we are obliged to follow them. Failing that, we will be subject to punishment or danger. Sorrowfully enough, we are creating those rules and disciplines simultaneously we are ruining them. As a result, accidents, dangers and casualties are increasing more and more in our society. Some people seem to think that disciplines are being made without necessity, neglecting to notice discipline in its real meaning in Myanmar. Discipline is called in the Myanmar language as “Si Kan,” made up of two syllables. The first monosyllabic meaning of “Si” means a boundary in Myanmar and the second one “Kan” means a bank/the side of a river and the land near it in Myanmar. A boundary or a bank forbids us not to go past them. If we go beyond a boundary, we are likely to be arrested for trespassing. Likewise, we will plunge into the river and will be drowned if we proceeded without noticing a bank. Boundaries and banks are warning us to avoid moving on, knowingly or otherwise. They can be likened to rules and disciplines in our society. Some may scornfully think that discipline and rules restrict or control our actions and deeds. It is quite wrong in assuming so. We individually need to develop the practice of self-discipline. Even though we are not punished by rules for violating these rules and disciplines, we will surely get contempt from others noticing us violating disciplines. To sum it up, let us build a just and prosperous society by keeping self-discipline.

The wheel of Dhammacakya Sutta turns on the Fullmoon of Wazo

Waizo, the Rain Retreat is the Buddha’s way of conserving and preserving natural environment.

The theme of this year’s World Environment Day 5 June 2017 celebrated across the world is “connecting People to Nature”.

It was exactly the same theme “Connecting the People to Nature” when Lord Gotama Buddha prescribed Waizo Rain Retreat for his monk disciple followers. Previously, Buddhist monks were free to move about at anytime, anywhere in all seasons of the year, until public complaint reached the Buddha. In their free moves especially in the rainy season when farmers were busy with their cultivating activities in the fields and when all living world is fully alive with flora and fauna in nourishing showers free movements of Buddhist monks caused in inadvertent unintentional annoyances and damages. The farmers had to stop their work to pay respect and donate food to the monks. The moving monks unknowingly and accidentally step upon creatures coming out and creeping about from the wet soil, some die under their or some crippled.

When the Buddha heard the public outcries about these accidents, he was obliged to prescribe a monk discipline to restrict the movements of them in rainy season. Thus appeared Waizo Vows for Rain Retreat. Every monk was required to take the vow at the assembly of monks of the same monastery that he would reside at the monastery of his residence and would not go out or move about outside of the monastic compound during the period of three monsoon months Waizo, Wakhaung and Tawthalin [July, August and September respectively]. If unavoidable circumstances or situation occurred that required his stay outside the residential monastery and his movement away from the compound, he was required to beg for leave of absence not more than seven days from the Abbot Monk or some senior brother of his. If after making that formal request for leave of absence, he immediately suffers from the sin of breaking Wa Vow [Si Kan]. Losing all his ordained years and the right to receive Kathin robe offering.

Vows have the beneficial impact upon the education of the monks. During rain retreat monks could devote whole time to learning Pariyatti and practicing Patipatti and Pariveda—the three Sasan of Buddhism —learning, Practicing and promoting.

Farmers could devote themselves to agricultural activities unannoyed by the sight of monks. Flora and fauna old and new safely enjoy their lives under monsoon showers.

Waizo Rain Retreat is Lord Buddha’s way of connecting People [clergy and laity] to Nature.

Dhammacakya Sutta discussed on the fullmoon night of Waizo by Lord Gotama also bears profound natural environmental significance.

King Sudhodara of Kapilavatthu kingdom gathered all Brahmin Priests who were Raja gurus [Royal advisers] to his audience. He presented his baby son Prince Siddhartha and asked them to read his horoscope [Record of Birth Day] and predict his future. All gurus Brahmins carefully examined the horoscope referring to all vedas treatises. One by one they gave their prediction to the King each showing two fingers.

“Your Imperial Majesty, I’m happy to tell you the result of my examination. Either your son would grow up to succeed your throne and become a Universal monarch or he would renounce his mundane life to become a forest recluse and eventually become Buddha. “I could not let my son leave the palace and become Buddha. I want him succeed me to throne and become checharavan [Universal monarch]. Could you make some means of keeping my son in the palace and succeed me to the throne?”

“Oh yes, your Imperial Majesty. Just build three palaces for three seasons Yama, Thuba and Thuyama and surround your son with all attractions and pleasures of palace life. Let him always get caught up in the defilements of mundane life”.

The King then turned to the last Brahmin guru, Kondinya, the most junior guru, your son with all attractions and pleas-

“Your Imperial Majesty, I am.”

“Showing only one forefinger of his, the youngest Brahmin guru replied.

The July Full Moon Day: A Message for Ecological and Social Harmony

Oxford Sayadaw Venerable Prof. Dr. Dhammasami DPhil (Oxford).

The full moon day of July, known in Burmese as wase la-pyi, is one of the most significant days in the Buddhist calendar, more so today for Theravada Buddhists, because, among many others, it is on this day some 2605 years ago that the Buddha starts his teaching mission and it has always been on this full moon day that Theravada Buddhist monastics commence their three-month rains-retreat (vassa).

Two months after his full enlightenment under the Bodhi tree in Buddhagaya and on the full moon day of July, (asahla in Pali) the Buddha reaches the Deer Park, near Varanasi, and immediately begins to share with his five former friends the newly discovered Middle Path as the way to overcome suffering. The Middle Way is as an alternative to the existing thoughts current in India: the eternalist and the materialist (nihilist) philosophy, or the practice of self-mortification and of self-indulgence. The Buddha finds that all of those mutually exclusive philosophies and practices are based on a belief in either a supposedly unchanging metaphysical self or a physical self.

On his part, using the Middle Path factors, the Buddha explains our daily experience as a process of psychological and physical phenomena, basically ruled by the inter-dependent law of cause and effect, and not by any divine being such as creator God or mysterious entity such as an unchanging soul. This Middle Path teaching, formulated as the Four Noble Truths, raises the status of human beings to the supreme level and at the same time places in the hands of every human the full responsibility for their happiness and misery.

This First Sermon is known as the Dhamma-cakra-pavattana Sutta, the discourse on setting in motion the Wheel of Dhamma-cakra, or the first time the Buddha spoke in a comprehensive and systematic manner. This is the key message from the Buddha to the people of all walks of life. All the teachings of the Buddha, whether in writing or in the spoken word, are based on the First Sermon, and it is from here that the Buddhist path is laid. The First Sermon is the dharma-cakra or the wheel of dhamma. Its purpose is to turn the wheel of dhamma and to provide a framework for understanding the teachings of the Buddha. This wheel is made up of three parts: the Buddha, the Dhamma, and the Sangha.

The Buddha starts his teaching on the full moon day of July, known as Esala Poya, Buddhists, who are mutual between the Sangha and the laity. The former can reduce the discomfort associated with travelling during the severe weather, get to know more fellow practitioners better informed of the monks and nuns’ specific need. See Page-10

“Your Imperial Majesty, after I have thoroughly examined your son’s horoscope and checked with all vedas treatises I obtained one and the only one answer. That is that your son would definitely become a Buddha. He would never succeed you to the throne. I am a faithful royal guru who speaks truth, the who truth nothing but truth. I do not tell what your Imperial Majesty wishes to hear that your son will succeed you to the throne so that I get royal favour. Here are the exact dates of events of your son’s life. Your son would get married and had a son born. By the age of 29 years after seeing the four visions — the Aged, the Infirmitry, the Dead and Forest. Recluse, he would renounce his mundane life to become a recluse in the forest. After six years of austerity practices in the Uruvala Forest, he would attained Buddhahood at the age of 35 years. He would give his first sermon to the five forest recluses in the Migara Wunna Deer Park. Next he would continue his dharma duta his teachings journey home and abroad for 45 years. Then at the age of 80 he would pass away and attain Nivarna — Escape to the Samsara the cycle of births and rebirths and all sufferings and cravings to reach the peace of body and soul.”

Your Imperial Majesty, you may pun- ish me for not answering what you wish to hear that your son succeed you. I was a faithful royal guru, to speak the truth. Now I resign my post of royal guru. I shall go to the Uruvala forest to become a recluse in the forest. The July Full Moon Day: A Message for Ecological and Social Harmony

In return, the laity get the opportunity to learn the teaching from more monastics who observe the rains-retreat close to their home and ensure their own way of life was oriented to understanding problem and that your son’s solution. Very influential, this practice has been in many Theravada communities that in quite a number of places people usually postpone events such as a wedding ceremony during the three months. In some countries such as Thailand Lao, monasteries organize a ritual of chanting the Vessantara-jataka, the last of the many former lives stories of the Buddha, which they call des mahachat (the preaching of the Great Life Story). In Myanmar, the month of July is simply known as wao, the month of the rains-retreat. This practice of the rains-retreat is a good illustration how the Buddha makes a wise decision balancing between the need to adopt a certain ritual for social harmony and the monastics’ practice. This practice poses some of the challenges to the Bud- dhist missionary monks as their work becomes more and more international.

In addition to those two significant events (the First Sermon and the begin- ning of the rains-retreat), the July full moon day is also noteworthy for other main events in Buddhism. It is the day Prince Siddhattha, the future Buddha, was conceived in the womb of Queen Mahamaya, the birthday of Prince Rahula to Princess Yasodhara and Prince Siddhatth- tha; the commencement of the Abhidham- ma (psychology) teaching by the Buddha for his mother and other celestials in the Tavatimsa Heaven in the seventh year after his enlightenment; the performance through absorption meditation of the twin wonders (yala patimahathya) in Salwadi to subdue to the pride of the heretics, and the commencement of the first Buddhist synod (sangayana) to rehearse and clas- sify the teachings, three months after the Buddha passes away.

Here one may note that this rains-re- treat observation practice has been associ- ated with the South and Southeast Asian monsoon and that in Europe and America where Buddhism has taken root for over a hundred years, July to September is the summer. Summer is the time western people go on long holiday; even the governments slow down their work. Parliaments have a long summer recess, for example, from 20 July to 5 September in the United States. This situation poses some of the challenges to the Bud- dhist missionary monks as their work becomes more and more international.

The dilemma for those Buddhist monks in the West is that the rains-retreat rule dictates them to stay in one location for the entire period. As already discussed, the Buddha adopts the rains-retreat prac- tice from others and lays down certain rules for his disciples with reward and penalty attached to them; those who begin their rains-retreat on the day after the July full moon day are entitled to receive a new piece of robe, known as kathina, provided it is at the request of a five forest recluses. In some trying circumstances the spirit is still possible to say that today even in some trying circumstances the spirit of the three-month rains-retreat is still fully respected and adhered to among the Theravada Buddhist followers.

The July Full Moon Day: A Message for Ecological and Social Harmony

The July Full moon day, usually the 15th of the third lunar month, is an auspicious day in the Theravada Buddhist calendar. It is celebrated as a day of spiritual reflection and a time to appreciate the natural environment.

In Myanmar, the month of July is simply known as “Wao,” and the Full Moon Day is a significant event. During this period, the forests become quiet and peaceful, providing a serene setting for meditation and reflection. The Full Moon Day is also a time for social harmony and community building.

The theme for the Full Moon Day is the “Middle Way,” which the Buddha emphasized as the path to freedom from suffering. The Middle Way is a balanced approach to life, avoiding extremes such as indulgence and asceticism.

In the context of Buddhism, the Full Moon Day is often associated with the practice of the Rains Retreat, where monks observe a three-month period of renunciation and meditation. This practice is rooted in the Buddha’s own life and teachings, as he left his princely life to become a recluse and later attained enlightenment.

During the Rains Retreat, monks are expected to live a simple life, focusing on their spiritual growth and the well-being of the community. The Full Moon Day provides a reminder of this spiritual journey and a time to reflect on one’s own path towards liberation.

The Full Moon Day is also a time to appreciate nature and the natural environment. Monks and laypeople often participate in forest rituals and meditations to connect with nature and gain insight into the impermanence of all things.

In conclusion, the Full Moon Day is a significant event in the Theravada Buddhist calendar, reflecting the values of spiritual reflection, social harmony, and a balanced approach to life. It serves as a reminder of the Middle Way and the importance of living in harmony with nature.

Stood these two Suttas the five as ca- tatic forest recluses became arahat [saint monk] one after another on the following consecutive days. The first as forest accluse to become saint monk was Kondaya. These five arahat saint monks formed the first Sangha order to impart Buddha’s dhamma [Truth] to all sentient beings. Because all five ascetic forest re- cluses became monks in the month of Wazo. Myanmar people made the tradition of the Festival of Ordination of monks in Wazo. Wazo full moon day is commemor- ated as Dhammacakya Sutta Day by Myanmar Buddhist across the country by reciting the Sutta and expounding it to the audience.

Today, Migra Wunna, the deer Park Forest is well maintained by the Indian Government for Buddhist pilgrimage tourism as well as natural environment- alists across the world. Well preserved and preserved, the entire park is made free from all pollutions. No industries, no emissions in its vicinities. You walk on foot or button charged wheel chains are provided for the needy. Many land marks and memorials of the Dhammacakya Sutta are well preserved to retain the original atmosphere of those days when this first sermon was delivered.

After the visit you return home not only with the essence of the sermon in your heart and soul but also that of green natural environment for the sustainability of our planet Earth with all living beings inhabiting on it.

Facing defeat in Mosul, Islamic State mounts diversionary attack to the south

MOSUL/TIKRIT, Iraq — Islamic State militants attacked a village south of Mosul, killing several people including two journalists, even as they were about to lose their last redoubt in the city to an Iraqi military onslaught, security sources said on Friday.

The assault on Imam Gharbi village appeared to be the sort of diversionary, guerrilla-style strike tactics Islamic State is expected to focus on as US-backed Iraqi forces regain control over cities IS captured in a shock 2014 offensive. Security sources said IS insurgents had infiltrated Imam Gharbi, some 70 km (44 miles) south of Mosul on the western bank of the Tigris river; on Wednesday evening from a pocket of territory still under their control on the eastern bank.

Two Iraqi journalists were reported killed and two others wounded as they covered the security forces’ counter-attack to take back the village on Friday. An unknown number of civilians and military were also killed or wounded in the clashes.

In Mosul, IS clung to a slowly shrinking pocket on the Tigris west bank, battling for every metre with snipers, grenades and suicide bombers, forcing security forces to fight house-to-house in densely-populated blocks.

The Iraqi military has forecast final victory this week in what used to be the de facto capital of IS’s “caliphate” in Iraq, after a grinding eight-month, US-backed offensive to wrest back the city, whose pre-war population was 2 million. But security forces faced ferocious resistance from roughly several hundred militants hunkered down among thousands of civilians in the maze of alleyways in Mosul’s Old City. Air strikes and artillery salvos continued to pound Islamic State’s last Mosul bastion on Friday, a Reuters TV crew said.

Mosul was by far the largest city seized by Islamic State in its offensive three years ago where the ultra-hardline group declared its “caliphate” over adjoining parts of Iraq and Syria.

Striped of Mosul, IS’s dominance in Iraq will be reduced to mainly rural, desert areas west and south of the city where tens of thousands of people live, and the militants are expected to keep up asymmetric attacks on selected targets across Iraq.

Adhel Abu Ragheef, a Baghdad-based expert on jihadist groups, said Islamic State was likely to carry out “more of these raid-type attacks on security forces to try to divert them away from the main battle”, now in Mosul and then in other areas west of Mosul including near the Syrian border still IS control.

Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi declared the end of Islamic State’s “state of falsehood” a week ago, after security forces took Mosul’s mediaeval Grand al-Nuri mosque — although only after retreating militants blew it up.

Months of grinding urban warfare in Mosul have displaced 900,000 people, about half the city’s pre-war population, and killed thousands, according to aid organisations. The United Nations predicts it will cost more than $1 billion to repair basic infrastructure in Mosul. Iraq’s regional Kurdish leader said on Thursday in a Reuters interview that the Baghdad central government had failed to prepare a post-battle political, security and governance plan.

The offensive has damaged thousands of structures in Mosul’s Old City and destroyed nearly 500 buildings, satellite imagery released by the United Nations on Thursday showed. In some of the worst affected areas, almost no buildings appear to have escaped damage, and Mosul’s dense construction means the extent of the devastation might be underestimated, UN officials said.—Reuters

Turkey detains 29 suspected Islamic State militants in Istanbul — Anadolu

ANKARA — Turkish police have detained 29 suspected Islamic State militants in Istanbul, 22 of them foreign nationals, believed to be preparing to travel to Syria, the state-run Anadolu news agency said on Friday.

Anti-terrorism police carried out operations at 20 separate addresses in six city districts overnight, Anadolu said, adding that one-unlicensed weapon and documents belonging to the jihadist group were found in the raids.

Thousands of foreign fighters have joined the Islamist militants in their self-proclaimed caliphate in Syria and Iraq in recent years, many of them passing through Turkey.

Ankara has detained more than 5,000 Islamic State suspects and deported some 1,290 foreign militants from 95 different countries in recent years, according to Turkish officials. It has also refused entry to at least 38,269 individuals.

On Wednesday, Turkish police detained six suspected Islamic State militants for planning to attack a protest march led by the head of the secularist main opposition party.

In a separate operation on Wednesday, Turkish police detainted another 37 Islamic State suspects across Turkey, authorities said.—Reuters

Turkey takes control of nearly 1,000 companies since failed coup — deputy PM

ISTANBUL — Turkish authorities have seized or appointed an administrator to 965 companies with total annual sales of some $6 billion in the year since an attempted coup in July 2016, Deputy Prime Minister Nurettin Canikli said on Friday.

Under the emergency rule imposed after the coup, Turkish authorities took control of companies suspected of having links to followers of Fethullah Gulen, the US-based Muslim cleric blamed by Ankara for the failed military takeover.

The 965 companies under state management control, based in 43 provinces across Turkey, have assets totalling some $31 billion lira ($11.3 billion) and employ 46,357 people, Canikli said in a written statement.

Turkey took control of a bank, industrial companies and media firms as part of the crackdown on companies accused of links to Gulen. He has denied involvement in the putsch.

Apart from the business crackdown, Turkey has jailed more than 50,000 people pending trial and suspended or dismissed some 150,000, including soldiers, police officers, teachers and civil servants, over alleged links with terrorist groups.

The purge has alarmed Turkey’s Western allies and human rights groups, who say President Tayyip Erdogan is using the coup as a pretext to muzzle dissent, a charge he denies.

Ten people including Amnesty International’s Turkey director and other rights activists were detained this week on suspicion of membership of a terrorist organization, Amnesty said on Thursday, in what it called a “grotesque abuse of power”.

The government has said the security measures are necessary because of the gravity of the threats facing Kurdish and Islamist militants. More than 240 people were killed in last year’s coup attempt.—Reuters
World leaders pressure Trump on climate at start of G20 summit

HAMBURG — World leaders ratcheted up pressure on US President Donald Trump to compromise on climate and trade as a Group of 20 summit got underway in Germany amid clashes between police and protestors.

In a joint communique issued as the leaders gathered in a vast convention centre in Hamburg, Brazil, Russia, India and China — the so-called BRICS countries — called on the G20 to push for implementation of the Paris climate deal despite Trump’s decision last month to pull the United States out of it. “The Paris agreement on climate change is an important consensus that doesn’t come easily and must not be given up easily,” said Chinese President Xi Jinping.

British Prime Minister Theresa May said G20 leaders would urge Trump to reconsider his decision on Paris. “We are not renegotiating the Paris agreement, that stays, but I want to see the US looking for ways to join it,” she told the BBC. The meeting comes at a time of major shifts in the global geo-political landscape, with Trump’s “America First” policies pushing Europe and China closer together.

Trump will meet President Vladimir Putin for the first time on Friday afternoon, an encounter that will be intensely scrutinised following allegations by US intelligence agencies that Moscow meddled in the US election to help Trump win. The summit also brings together Trump and Xi at a time when Trump will meet German Chancellor Angela Merkel, faces the daunting task of steering leaders towards a consensus on trade, climate and migration — all issues that have become more contentious since Trump entered the White House half a year ago.

She faces an election in a little more than two months and cannot appear to cave in to Trump, who is deeply unpopular in Germany. Nor will she be keen for an open confrontation that could deepen tensions with Washington.

“There is quite a delicate balance that Angela Merkel will have to navigate in a way, because it is not clear that being confrontational won’t just create even more of a credibility problem for G20 cooperation,” Indonesian Finance Minister Sri Mulyani Indrawati told Reuters in an interview.

US bombers challenge China in South China Sea flyover

TOKYO/BEIJING — Two US bombers have flown over the disputed South China Sea, the US Air Force said on Friday, asserting the right to treat the region as international territory despite China’s claim to virtually all of the waterway.

The flight by the B-1B Lancer bombers from Guam on Thursday came as US President Donald Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping prepare for a meeting on the sidelines of a G20 summit in Germany.

The two leaders were expected to discuss what China can do to rein in North Korea’s missile and nuclear weapon programmes.

North Korea fired an intercontinental ballistic missile on Tuesday that has experts believe has the range to reach Alaska and Hawaii and perhaps the US Pacific Northwest. While Trump has been seeking China’s help to press North Korea, the US military has, nevertheless, been asserting its “freedom of navigation” rights in the South China Sea, at the risk of angering China.

Asked about the flight by the two US bombers, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Geng Shuang said there was no problem with freedom of navigation or overflight for the East and South China Seas.

“But China resolutely opposes individual countries using the banner of freedom of navigation and overflight to flaunt military force and harm China’s sovereignty and security,” he said.

China’s Defence Ministry, in a short statement sent to Reuters, said China always maintained its vigilance and “effectively monitors relevant countries’ military activities next to China”.

Hundreds show support for former Thai PM as rice scheme trial nears an end

BANGKOK — Thailand’s former prime minister Yingluck Shinawatra arrived at a Bangkok court to shouts of encouragement from her supporters on Friday, two weeks before the final stages of a case about her involvement in a ruinously expensive state rice subsidy scheme.

Yingluck, whose government was ousted in a 2014 military coup, faces up to 10 years in prison if she is found guilty of negligence over her role in the scheme, which proved popular with rural voters but was a disaster for state coffers.

The former prime minister and opposition say the trial is politically motivated and is aimed at undermining the populist movement that has won every election since 2001. The movement is opposed by Thailand’s powerful military and conservative elite.

Around 500 supporters showed up outside the court on Friday, police said, the largest turnout in many months. One wrote “Love the prime minister” on his hand, while others shouted: “fight, fight”. Yingluck has denied the charges against her. The military has said it will deploy troops to maintain security on July 21, when a final hearing in the case is expected.

Yingluck’s critics see the rice case as a litmus test of the junta’s sincerity in tackling corruption in politics, one of its promises after it seized power in 2014. Closing statements in the case will be delivered within 30 days of the final hearing, court officials said.

“I’m confident in the witnesses we’ve present- ed,” Yingluck told crowds outside the court.

Successive Thai governments have supported farmers since the 1980s, but none of the schemes has proved popular with farmers as the rice scheme pioneered by Yingluck’s brother, ousted former prime minister Thaksin Shinawatra.

Yingluck’s government went a step further, promising to buy rice from farmers at some 50 per cent above the market price. The scheme helped her to sail to victory in a 2011 general election, making her the country’s first female prime minister.

However, public losses from the scheme fuelled street protests against Yingluck that eventually saw her removed from power just weeks before the 2014 coup.

The scheme also saw Thailand lose its crown as the world’s top rice exporter as other countries, notably Viet Nam and India, filled the void when Thailand held back rice stocks it had bought from farmers.

The military government has managed to sell off most of about 18 million tonnes of rice accumulated during the rice scheme, some of it for industrial purposes, according to the commerce ministry. Yingluck said on Friday she was not sure when she would deliver her closing statement.—Reuters

James Bond stand aside; French spy service seeks computer geeks, linguists

PARIS — France’s foreign intelligence service is bolstering recruitment to counter Islamist militants and cyber criminals, but it is looking for computer wizards and linguists not would-be James Bonds.

Top of the vacancy list at France’s DGSE, the equivalent of America’s CIA or Britain’s MI6, are posts for young information technology gurus and linguists who master the finer points of Russian, Chinese or Farsi, widely used in Iran and Afghanistan. While publicity is not usually a priority of the foreign spy service (the Direction Générale de la Sécurité Extérieure, or DGSE), its head of administration said recruitment pressures are changing things. “All kinds of telecoms and IT profiles interest us, from crypto-mathematicians to super geeks,” Charles Moreau, head of DGSE administration, told Reuters during an interview at the agency’s northeastern Paris headquarters — nick-named “La Piscine” (The Pool). The DGSE hiring target is 500-600 recruits a year to bring its numbers up to 7,100 by 2019, but the skills required are not those of amphibious frogmen or of al Qaeda chief Osama bin Laden, US intelligence services stood accused of having expanded internet surveillance at the expense of old-fashioned feet-on-the-ground spies.—Reuters
An eager teenage Spider-Man swings into Marvel’s ‘Homecoming’

LOS ANGELES — You’ve seen Spider-Man swing through New York battling the Green Goblin, but you’ve never seen him idolize Iron Man.

That is what the director of “Spider-Man: Homecoming” hopes audiences will be drawn to as the third Spider-Man reboot in a decade hits movie theaters on Friday.

Jon Watts said he wanted to make “Homecoming” a crosstown between a superhero movie and a high school comedy where the dork lead is a fanboy of other superheroes.

“Homecoming” takes a lighter tone to the last two iterations of Spider-Man, in keeping with Marvel’s proclivity for harnessing laughs in its superhero franchise.

Unlike previous films where Spider-Man was the lone superhero, “Homecoming” has the web-slinging crime fighter battling alongside Marvel characters Iron Man and Captain America.

Usual scenes explaining Spider-Man’s origins — the death of his Uncle Ben and being bitten by a radioactive spider — are notably absent.

Spider-Man, this time played by Tom Holland, was first introduced alongside other Marvel characters in 2016’s “Captain America: Civil War.” A deal between Sony Corp, which holds rights to Spider-Man, and Walt Disney Co which has those for superheroes like Iron Man, let Spider-Man feature next to fellow Marvel characters. That allowed Watts to explore the boy hero in a way he said creators Stan Lee and Steve Ditko originally envisioned in comic strips withmultiple characters.

‘Marcella’ series 2 begins shoot, with Keith Allen come aboard

LONDON — Anna Friel’s “Marcella” is all set to return for a second run, with Keith Allen and Nigel Planer added to its cast.

Friel will be back as Detective Sergeant Marcella Backland, accompanied by Ray Panthaki, Nicholas Pinnock, Jamie Bamber and Jack Doolan, reported Digital Spy.

Production has begun on the new series of the show, but no air date has been yet decided. The series will see Marcella investigate the discovery of a young boy’s body inside a wall, surrounded by toys and a school blazer. “I’m thrilled to be reprising the role of Marcella. The reaction from everyone has been amazing, although the real question I keep being asked is whether the green parka will be making an appearance in season 2 as well?”, says Friel. —PTI

Sophie Turner opens up about her relationship with Joe Jonas

LOS ANGELES — Actress Sophie Turner reveals that dating Joe Jonas is like living in a “fishbowl”.

In a new interview with Marie Claire UK, the “Game of Thrones” actress talks about what it is like to be in a relationship with the Jonas brother.

“You do feel like you’re living in a fishbowl. Its frustrating that its the most mundane things that make the news/how boring,” Turner says.

The actress says she is happy with the musician but would prefer a different ship name for them.

She and Jonas are currently called “Jophie” but Turner says she prefers “Mophie”, the nickname for her and “Game of Thrones” co-star Maisie Williams.

“What’s that thing they say? Relationships come and go but friendship is always there,” Turner says.

Turner also says it makes her upset when people click her pictures in public without her consent.

“I find it really rude, and I will be rude back. Its such an invasion of privacy. I could be out with my mum on her birthday and I will ask them to delete it. I would much rather them come up and ask for a photo.” —PTI
Princess Mako's engagement announcement delayed after rain deaths

TOKYO — The Imperial Household Agency on Friday announced the postponement to 18 December of the engagement of Princess Mako, the eldest granddaughter of Emperor Akihito, who has been postponed from Saturday following the deaths of several people in heavy rain in southwestern Japan.

Princess Mako, 25, and her fiance-to-be, 25-year-old paralegal Kei Komuro, were initially scheduled to hold a press conference on Saturday afternoon following the agency’s announcement, but out of consideration for the suffering of people in the disaster-affected areas, the couple decided to postpone the event, a senior agency official said. A new date for the announcement has yet to be set.

Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko, as well as Princess Mako’s parents Prince Akishino and Princess Kiko approved the engagement announcement to reach the press in the afternoon for their first public appearance together.

Downpours have continued intermittently since Friday in Japan’s southwestern main island of Kyushu, where extremely heavy rain has left at least seven people dead and hundreds trapped by floodwaters.

The last marriage of a Japanese princess took place in 2014 when Princess Noriko, a daughter of Emperor Akihito’s late cousin Prince Takamado, tied the knot with Kunimaro Senge, the eldest son of the chief priest of Izumo Taisha, a Shinto shrine in Shimane Prefecture.

Princess Mako’s marriage would be the first of a naishinno princess, a daughter or granddaughter of the emperor, since Sayako Kuroda’s wedding to Komuro were then scheduled to meet the press in the afternoon for their first public appearance together.

China quietly marks 80th anniversary of Marco Polo Bridge incident

BEIJING — China marked in a relatively subdued manner on Friday the 80th anniversary of an incident that triggered the Second Sino-Japanese war, as the two countries now seek to improve relations.

As usual, China held a ceremony to remember the important historical day at a war museum southwest of Beijing, just near Lugou Bridge where the 1937 incident occurred.

But, compared to several years ago, coverage of the event by Chinese media was limited and there were no reports that any very high-ranking officials attended the ceremony.

In 2014, Chinese President Xi Jinping witnessed the ceremony in person and said China will fight any attempt to sanitize the history of Japan’s aggression.

A skirmish between troops of the two countries near the stone bridge, also known as the Marco Polo Bridge, on 7 July, 1937, developed into a full-scale conflict that lasted until Japan’s surrender to the Allied Powers in 1945.

Japan and China are seeking to increase high-level contacts to stabilize the bilateral relationship that had been badly damaged by differing views over territorial and wartime issues.

This year marks the 45th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic ties between Asia’s two biggest economies and next year is the 40th anniversary of their treaty of friendship and peace.

In Tokyo, Japanese officials are hoping to accelerate the pace of relationship repair after Xi finishes with a twice-a-decade congress of the Communist Party in the fall, the most politically-sensitive event this year for the Chinese leadership.—Kyodo News

Walters free to join Burnley, says Stoke manager Hughes

LONDON — Stoke City midfielder Jonathan Walters can join Premier League rivals Burnley if a deal is agreed between the clubs but the 33-year-old will also be welcome to stay back should talks fail, manager Mark Hughes has said.

Long-serving Ireland international Walters, who joined Stoke in 2010 and has played 271 games for them since then, has entered the final 12 months of his current contract.

“It seems that maybe Jon could take the option of a move to Burnley,” Hughes was quoted as saying by the Sentinel.

“I haven't had the opportunity to speak to him about it. I think it’s something that maybe he wants to make happen, but irrespective of that, if it falls through we would be more than happy because Jon coming back to the club would be fine.”

Media reports claimed Burnley would offer Walters a two-year deal with the option of a one-year extension at Turf Moor and Hughes felt Stoke were unable to match the length of contract.

“Maybe at this point of his career Jon feels that he needs a bit more security in terms of length of contract which maybe we weren’t prepared to match what he’s got on the table,” Hughes added.

“If he does go, we will look back on his time here with fond memories. He’s been a huge part of the success of the club in the Premier League and his contribution will never be underestimated.”

Walters made 23 league appearances last season as Stoke finished 13th in the league.

Deadly Lukaku poised to ignite Manchester United challenge

LONDON — Real Madrid’s Alvaro Morata had long seemed the man entrusted to replace the outgoing Zlatan Ibrahimovic, but it now appears that Everton’s Premier League-proven Romelu Lukaku will spearhead Manchester United’s attack for the upcoming season.

Last season Lukaku became only the fourth player to score 80 or more Premier League goals before the age of 24, all for West Bromwich Albion and Everton, neither of whom have possessed the creative resources of the league’s bigger teams.

United, in recent years, have also struggled in that regard, and their midfielder providers — Juan Mata, Henrikh Mkhitaryan, Jesse Lingard and Paul Pogba — mustered just 10 assists between them in the Premier League last season. Jose Mourinho’s pragmatic tactics did not help matters, but much of the reason why United’s midfield failed to deliver lay with the lack of movement up front. The majority of Ibrahimovic’s goals were laid on by fellow strikers in the penalty area. The Swede did not possess the legs to make runs down the channels or leave his man for dead — movement that creative midfielders thrive upon.

The story was the same whenever Wayne Rooney, now even more likely to leave after Thursday’s news that United have agreed a deal to sign Lukaku, received a rare opportunity to operate as the front focus. It is likely to be different with Lukaku, however: “He’s got a lot of attributes and, playing behind him, you know that once you turn he is going to be making a lot of good runs,” Ross Barkley told Everton’s official website in May.—Reuters
